The Templars' Circuit (la Ronde des Templiers)

A walk around Voyennes in the footsteps of fishermen. The area is teeming with all kinds of fish such as roach, pike, carp and eels.

Time: 1 hour 10

Distance: 3,5 km

Route: easy

Leaving from: Square in Voyennes, follow signs to the hoarding

Voyennes, 21 km south of Péronne, 7 km east of

- 1 From the car park, walk towards the marshes. The Canal du Nord is on your left, beyond the trees. The first pond stretches away in front of you; turn left and follow 6 Keep on until you reach the it round.
- Stride onto the first wooden bridge, and enjoy the gardens at the water's edge. Cross over the second wooden bridge, and follow the left bank of the next pond, presided over by a kind of peninsula in the centre.
- 3 Cross the road. Take the pebbly path, then the grassy one. Stroll round the ponds, then cross a wooden bridge.
- (4) Turn left to follow the towpath on the Canal du Nord for 50 m. Cross the wooden bridge and carry on. Entering a copse, walk along first the marsh, then the Somme.
- ⑤ Crossing an iron bridge, continue your stroll between the Somme on your left, and on your right

- the trees and marshes, including the Cows' Marsh. Take care, as the vegetation is denser here. with holes and roots.
- towpath. Turn right and follow it along, then cross the road and you are back at the car park.

Tourism Office Haute-Somme, Tel: 03 2284 4238 www.hautesomme-tourisme.com

The shadow of the Templars In 985, it would seem that King Lothaire entrusted the defence of the Somme crossing at Vovennes to the Templars. In 1182, the Chapter of Noyon rented to Nivelon de Montdidier, master of the Temple in the diocese of Novon, its mills, roads and fisheries in Voyennes, for ten hogsheads of wheat and 40 sols in Vermandois money. The Temple monks undertook to pay the agreed rent to Novon, bearing the cost of transporting the grain themselves, and to allow horses, carriages pulled by two or four horses and any other vehicles belonging to the Chapter free passage on the roads. As for the canons, they had to make sure that their men would use the Templars' mill and no other.

